conditions as he thinks the best calculated to insure, if not a blissful, at least a peaceful life. Each individual also, as a husband, father, and citizen, has his own predilections, his own likes and dislikes, he may demand a promise of full and unreserved obedience on those. This, in the pursuit of her object, the Gy readily promises; and as the character of this extraordinary creature is so implicitly obedient to her husband and word none can be over broken even by the giddiest Gy, the conditions stipulated for are religiously observed. In fact, notwithstanding all their abstract rights and powers, the Gy are almost amiable, conciliatory, and submissive wives I have seen even exceed the happiest households abroad. It is an aphorism among them, that "where G^y loves it is her pleasure to obey." It will be observed that in the relationship of the sexes I have spoken only of the advantage for such it is directed to which this creature has adapted, that her illicit con-
